Recollecting Landscapes is an ongoing rephotographic survey project which documents a century of landscape transformation in Belgium (see www.recollectinglandscapes.be). This presentation focuses on the transformation of the ‘everyday’ Belgian landscape, a landscape that has as much been shaped by actions ‘from below’ made by millions of individuals than by decisions ‘from above’, such as large-scale re-allotments and infrastructural works. The presentation is based on a close reading of the photographic series, as well as on historical/theoretical reflections found in literature on ‘everyday’, ‘ordinary’ and ‘vernacular’ landscapes.
